

Thumbprint

July 01 - 28, 2022

About the Show

Music by: Kamala Sankaram

Libretto by: Susan Yankowitz

Thumbprint is a chamber opera inspired by the experiences of Mukhtar Mai, a contemporary real-life warrior for women's rights and education in Pakistan. Sankaram's dynamic score blends Hindustani and European opera influences to tell this astonishing story of courage in the face of oppression.

Thumbprint premiered in 2014 and was commissioned by Beth Morrison Projects and the HERE Arts Center for the PROTOTYPE Festival.

Chautauqua Opera Company's production is led by Omer Ben Seadia (Director) and Kristin Roach (Conductor).

90 minutes, no intermission

Director's Note

It is a great honor to tell the story of Mukhtar Mai: a woman who, in the darkest of times and the depths of personal trauma, looked around and said, "No more."

It is hard to do any research about this incredibly brave woman without immediately focusing on the trauma that she endured. However, I prefer to focus on the incredible work she did AFTER her traumatic event. Mukhtar used her trauma as a catalyst to fight the system that allowed for her oppression. She found a way, against all odds, to provide for her own education and learning to read and write. And then she provided for others by opening her own school and educating so many girls and boys from her own community. In the years following her case, laws were changed, new protections for women were put in place, and Mukhtar remained in the Pakistani village where she grew up. This is not a story of picking up and leaving everything behind, but one of looking inside your own community and asking, "How can I make things better?"

What this opera does so well is to allow Mukhtar to speak out, to sing, to scream the things that we are all feeling. Kamala Sankaram and Susan Yankowitz wrote a piece that is honest and true to the events that were forced not only on Mukhtar, but on her entire family and her community for decades. One way we chose to represent the toll that was taken, and the lasting effects of trauma, was through the costumes, which become increasingly stained, their color being drained slowly throughout the show. By the end we have found healing and some sense of justice, but not restoration, reminding us that the fight is ongoing.

We hope to celebrate the joy, the music, the culture, and the love of Pakistan. The story of Mukhtar Mai is specific to the time and place where the events occurred, but is in no way a unique one. Women all over the world, including the U.S, are having their rights challenged and threatened, and are subjected to sexual, physical, and emotional abuse daily. We can be encouraged and inspired by Mukhtar Mai, while sharing in her rage, her joy, and her hope.

Preparing this opera for the past three years and directing it has been a humbling and challenging experience, and I am thrilled to share it with the Chautauqua community.

Production Dedication

It is hard to fathom the fact that the events depicted in the opera Thumbprint took place almost exactly 20 years ago. And yet, the single school that we see Mukhtar Mai create at the end of the opera has grown into a whole system of schools educating boys and girls up through grade 10, a shelter, resource center, mobile unit, and library. This production is dedicated to Mukhtar Mai and the thousands of women who have benefited from her advocacy.

You can support Mukhtar Mai's work by donating to the Mukhtar Mai Women's Organization—mukhtarmai.org

Synopsis

Inspired by the true story of Mukhtar Mai, the events depicted in the opera take place in Pakistan in the early 2000s.

Mukhtar Mai is an illiterate woman from a low caste. As the opera starts, she is at home with her mother and her sister, Annu. Their joyful routine of chores and play is suddenly interrupted when men of the powerful landowning Mastoi tribe arrive. Faiz Mohammed, the Mastoi tribe's representative, announces that they have jailed the family's 12-year-old son, Shakur, for committing a "dishonorable" act with a girl of their tribe. He demands that a woman from the offending tribe come to ask for forgiveness. Mukhtar steps forward and offers that she will come later that day to beg forgiveness for her family, for her brother's release, and to restore "order." When Mukhtar arrives, instead of accepting her offering, the elders of the Mastoi tribe order Mukhtar to be gang-raped by the members of the tribe as retribution.

Returning home from the violent attack, Mukhtar contemplates suicide. Her mother's fierce love gives her the courage to speak out and make a statement to the police. At the police station, she is directed to sign a blank document which she is told will later be filled in with her report. Not knowing how to read or write, she is forced to sign the paperwork with only her thumbprint.

A trial is held and the Mastoi are judged guilty of their actions. Mukhtar is offered a settlement by the Pakistani government. She chooses to spend the money on a school where girls in her village can be educated so that they, unlike her, will never know the humiliation of having to sign their names with a thumbprint.
